Description

He healed minds for a living—until he lost control of his own. Asher Lockwood was a board-certified psychiatric nurse practitioner and CEO, trained at Yale and revered by patients and colleagues alike. But behind the white coat was a man spiraling. Fueled by Adderall, crushed by bipolar disorder, and entangled in a toxic marriage with a sociopathic partner, Asher’s world crumbled. Rehab, courtrooms, psych wards, and eventually jail became his new reality.

In this raw, brutally honest memoir, Asher chronicles his descent into madness, the family court battles that tore him from his sons, and the slow, excruciating climb back to himself. Told with unflinching honesty, dark humor, and surprising grace, this book is more than a story of addiction and mental illness—it’s a testament to the human spirit’s capacity to rise, even from ashes.
